The Advisory Council instructed me that I should not become involved in dealing with amateur radio operators since this was a field being pretty well exploited by the Navy at the present time. I was advised to write [redacted] a brief and courteous letter asking him to forward any information that came to his attention. I was also informed that my name, together with [redacted], had been submitted for clearance for discussion with the Advisory Council of the activities of the Army and the Navy along these lines, and that I would be called for another conference when clearance was obtained.

In view of these instructions, [redacted] advised me to take no further action on the pencilled note of General Sibert at this time.
